Two senior consultants end tour of duty

Professor Emmanuel Adekolu John, Professor of Community Medicine and Senior Consultant and Dr EA Boateng, Consultant Haematologist, Wednesday, 28th June, returned to their native country, Nigeria and Ghana respectively after successfully serving the Royal Victoria Teaching Hospital for two years each.

Both had served the hospital with commitment and dedication towards their work and also contributed significantly in the transformation process of making RVH into a fully fledged Teaching Hospital.

At a ceremony in honour of the two consultants in the Board Room, Dr Malick Njie, the Deputy Chief Medical Director, thanked them for their input in the successes of this hospital.

“The two have contributed significantly in the success of this hospital.

During their two-year contract appointments they have shown commitment to their work and we hope that they will continue to remember and support RVTH in the future, said Dr Njie, adding that he hoped that both Prof Adekolu John and Dr Boateng would make a comeback to work for the hospital in the near future.

The outgoing consultants expressed delight over the support and assistance accorded them during their tenure at the hospital.

However, they observed the indiscipline among the staff and the need to improve on the communication in the hospital.

Both Baboucarr Ngum, the Public Relations Officer and Allan Rickmann, the Management Adviser, expressed gratitude to the outgoing consultants and prayed that they continue to excel in their future endeavours.
